Add Zing to your professional life

Wake up early morning and reach office in time, check emails and get immersed into work, finish that to-do list and leave for home, take a paycheck and then update your resume to add that new project. Most of us unfortunately are happy with this kind of life. A handsome salary, nice family, and regular appraisals. But if you devote sometime and think what exactly are you making of yourself, you might surprise yourself - may be you are earning nothing!

Work will vanish into forgone projects, experience will turn stale as new technologies will come in, and money will all be lost into the huge market we have.

When you think of yourself, you might realize that you are nothing but a part of huge crowd that does the same thing again and again. Raise your buried head from your cubicle and notice that many people are better than you, then you are better than many of them as well. Few are more popular and respected than others. Even you are one of the respected people. People know you for that skill with which you are still sitting on that revolving chair. Now look at the exit door of your office and question yourself - How many people know me for what I know, out of this office?

People outside of the office are only those who are related to you by family, friendship, or business. Does an unknown person ever would know you without having met you.

Editorial

Your obvious reply would be NO, and reasons you have to satisfy yourself would be like - I do not have any special talent or I simply am too busy to try out that passion of mine to become popular.

Well, I disagree

I believe that you can still be popular and be appreciated by many people who are not connected with you by any means. And overall, you can have something to show to your grandchildren down the line 20 years from now apart from house or a bank balance.

Think about blogging!

Yes, you can blog what you know. Create a free blog on any free blog service provider website and write what you know.

You do not need to be a writer or expert in English; all you need to know is what you know.

Simply pick a topic of your interest and start writing about it. You do not need to devote special hours, simply open that new post page on your system and keep jotting points of topic that you would like to write on. and then whenever you get time, elaborate on one point at a time. This will not only keep you refreshed but will also help you get charged up every time you feel tired or bored. Normally you would turn to Facebook or Twitter to rejuvenate your senses, this time try a blog.

As you keep writing, your content gets automatically saved on server - that means your work is always safe. If some idiot friend of yours jumps up and pulls you for a tea break, you can simply close that browser window and you will have your work saved till last letter.

When completed, simply copy entire text and put it into a Word file so that you can get rid of typos. Read couple of times before posting it back to the blog. Now, now simply post it and share the URL on your LinkedIn or Facebook profile pages. In the list of people who would appreciate your work, there will be many who would realize your knowledge and would like to hear more from you - a reason to write back and again.

A regular posting to the blogger would give you an identity and you will earn more followers. You never know someday your name could appear in the top list of Google search engine when you try your name.

You have the inspiration now, go, get started now! - the best!

KOOH Sports applauds the story of Nitesh Gayari

A young budding cricketer from Udaipur who is training with Rajasthan Royals in IPL8

Udaipur: This is the story of Nitesh Gayari, a young boy from Village Krishna Nagari (Kalarohi), Sisarma District in Udaipur, Rajasthan. Nitesh is like any of you all. A young boy with passion for cricket and dreams to play with India's leading cricketers. The only difference - Nitesh worked hard and made his dream come true!

Being a cricket enthusiast and with the grit to shine bright, Nitesh's humble background did not deter him from playing cricket. He used to play cricket with tennis ball with other village boys. To help make ends meet, he used to work from 8pm to 12 am in a small paper company located near his dwellings.

People had started noticing his passion and raw talent.

He was getting noticed in his village and a Good Samaritan suggested and coerced him to join a professional cricket training academy. With no money this too seemed distant and unachievable. But then, he came to know about the KOOH Sports Cricket Development Centre and the scholarship offered to talented cricket players. He was talented. No doubt. The KOOH Sports technical team saw his talent and offered him a place in the academy - as a special scholarship. This was not as easy as it seems for him. The KOOH Sports Cricket Development Centre in Udaipur was 17 km away from his house and having no vehicle he used to cover this long journey by walking these 17 kilometers each way.

Apart from his elder brother none of his family members knew about the cricket practice sessions. Nitesh made his dream come true and how! He worked hard and proved his mettle. His scholarship was well deserved. His skills got noticed by the selectors of the Beyond 22 Yards programme. And now he has won himself an internship with the mighty Rajasthan Royals players. His family could not be more proud of him.

We are proud of his achievements and wish him the best of luck. Chirag Patel, CEO - KOOH Sports: "We are delighted to discover such great talent and dedicated kids across our academies and we aim to aid holistic development and training of kids that goes beyond classrooms and into the playing fields. The KOOH Sports Cricket Development Centres powered by Rajasthan Royals focus on core sport skills alongside physiological, nutritional and psychological needs for kids taking up the sport. Our key focus is to provide these facilities at an affordable price point and make sure this kind of professional training is far more accessible."

Vodafone Foundation Instant Network team deployed to Nepal

RH Team

The Vodafone Foundation Instant Network Mini, a portable 'mobile network in a backpack', has been taken to the Kathmandu Valley in Nepal to help restore communications to some of the areas worse affected by last weekend's earthquake.

The Instant Network Mini, an 11kg mobile network in a backpack which can be set up in just 10 minutes, has arrived in Kathmandu with the Instant Network team leader on a commercial flight. The Instant Network team will offer support to local operators to help re-establish mobile communications, helping aid workers communicate during the relief effort and enabling people to contact their loved ones following the devastating earthquake.

The Vodafone Foundation has a team of volunteers, all Vodafone employees, on standby to deploy additional Instant Network equipment, including the larger, 100kg Vodafone Foundation Instant Network - a mobile network in four suitcases which can be taken on a commercial flight - as well as a new 3G version of the Instant Network.

The larger Vodafone Foundation Instant Network is light enough to travel in the back of a car or on commercial flights, enabling a quick response to disasters. Consisting of an antenna, a foldable mast, an industrial computer and base transceiver station, the equipment is powered by generators and can provide coverage within a radius of one kilometre. The Vodafone Foundation Instant Network was deployed in the Philippines in November 2013 during Typhoon Haiyan, where over 443,000 calls were made and 1.4 million SMS were sent in 29 days.

The Vodafone Foundation has also announced that it has made a donation of £100,000 to the UK Disaster Emergency Appeal (DEC) to support the relief effort in Nepal.

Andrew Dunnett, Vodafone Foundation Director, said: "Establishing communications in the aftermath of a natural disaster is crucial, both for the coordination of aid and to enable those affected to reconnect with family and friends. Through our Instant Network programme, we are able to deploy our people and our technology to provide communications support at a critical time."

Arhaan Behl to play in Chakravartin Ashoka Samrat!

While the making of a great King requires immense dedication, sustaining a King's lineage commands equal amount of work. Chandragupta Maurya, known to be an ideal king, was famous for balancing his benevolence and aggression in the most perfect way. Not only was he known for his benevolence, but also his skill as a warrior. COLORS' historical magnum opus Chakravartin Ashoka Samrat will witness the special appearance of Arhaan Behl as Chandragupta Maurya.

The show highlights Ashoka's relationship with his mother and his journey to becoming Emperor. In a flashback scene, Emperor Bindusara (Sameer Dharmadhikari) will be seen reminiscing about the great example his father Chandragupta Maurya had set for him as a king. Bindusara will use this memory of his deceased father to then set the mold for Ashoka, Sushim and Siamak. Bindusara's learnings from his father will connect the three generations of Chandragupta Maurya, Bindusara and Ashoka.

Toyota Kirloskar Motor launches The All New Camry

RH Team

Toyota Kirloskar Motor (TKM) today launched The All New Camry - Camry Hybrid and Camry Gasoline. The All New Camry comes with an unmatched offering of luxury. It has been designed to match the refined and ever evolving customers need for a luxury car. The All New Camry has an essentially new exterior that creates an even more innovative, prestige appearance appropriate for luxury sedan.

Camry Hybrid comes with Toyota's Hybrid Synergy Drive (HSD) powertrain. Camry Hybrid's "full hybrid" powertrain combines the performance of a 2.5 litre Atkinson cycle four - cylinder gasoline engine and a high - torque electric motor.

The Camry Hybrid has a combined power (engine + motor) output of 205 PS coupled with leading - edge fuel economy of 19.16 kmpl* and 122.8 gm of CO2 emissions per km of driving, which is far lesser than the conventional vehicles of similar engine size. The Camry Hybrid comes with an Electronically Controlled Continuous Variable Transmission (E-CVT), which provides enhanced driving performance, with reduced fuel consumption and lower NVH.

The Camry Hybrid a full hybrid is a self-charging vehicle, unlike an electric vehicle. When the vehicle decelerates or at the time of braking, the electric motor acts as a generator and converts the kinetic energy to electric energy in a process called regenerative braking. This energy is stored in Camry Hybrid's HV battery pack for later use when needed to power the vehicle.

Taking luxury to the next level the Camry Hybrid provides an advanced air conditioning system with three - zone control, a pollen filter and break through nanoE TM water coated ion technology. It provides moisturizing benefits to occupants' skin and hair and deodorises the cabin.
