U TURN- Govt puts school privatisation on hold

Jaipur : Facing resistance from more than 3.5 lakh teachers government may drop a proposal to hand over state-run schools to private players.

The new policy under a public private partnership (PPP) model that was drafted by the BJP government, to hand over more than 70,000 state-run school to the private education sector may be put on the back-burner, says minister of state for school education Vasudev Devnani. If efforts to improve the quality of education in schools show results, there will be no need for the PPP, he says.

"The government is setting up Adarsh schools, which will have adequate teachers, proper infrastructure and facilities. If we can run that successfully, we might not need PPP in education." The new education policy has been put up on the website of the education department inviting public suggestions and the government is considering them, he says.

Teacher and activists have been protesting against the new policy ever since the draft was made public in May. They said that the government's intention was to hand over land to big corporate houses and "safronise" education.

In March, the education department had issued a notification asking the five schools to get their properties evaluated by the state public works department before inviting bids from organizations that have experience of running at least 100 schools. The schools were selected on the basis of a survey by the government, the official says.

Asaram turns saint in books of NCERT

Udaipur : For most of us, Asaram Bapu is a self styled god man who is currently lodged in a Jodhpur prison for allegedly raping a 16-year-old girl. But for certain Class III students in the same city, especially those studying from a particular NCERT book, he is nothing short of a saint - rubbing shoulders with the likes of Swami Vivekananda, Mother Teresa and Ramakrishna Paramhansa.

On page 40 of the 'Naya Ujala' book, Asaram has been described as a saint (with a mugshot) who has done yeoman services for the betterment and purification of Hindu society. Not many, however, share the same view.
