Injectable polio vaccine campaign from Oct-Nov

Jaipur : Health minister Rajendra Rathore on Saturday announced a campaign for inactivated polio vaccine (IPV), an injectable vaccine, to be administered to children up to one year of age in Rajasthan from October-November. The vaccines from the Central government are expected to arrive by September end. Rathore was in Delhi to attend the two-day Call to Action Summit 2015: Ending Preventable Child and Maternal Deaths. Health ministers from 24 countries, state health ministers from India, international academic experts, health practitioners and global leaders from diverse sectors attended this leadership summit. He said the shift from oral polio vaccine (OPV) to IPV is part of the World Health Organisation's polio-eradication strategy. Compared to the three doses of OPV required earlier, a single dose of IPV would now be required.

The Bond of True Love

Udaipur : Rakhi marks an eternal bond of love and despite all the modernization in life and style, this remains as pious and pure as it always has been. People, no matter how practical are, cannot control their emotions on the day. If you see it materially, it's a formal small colorful thread that which does not cost more than rupees 10 but the values it carries are priceless. Ask any Indian irrespective of their religion, the festival of Rakhi boasts of highest emotional values. Indian festivals are world known and there are aplenty but only Rakhi is one such festival which entails a plethora of emotions. Not just brothers and sisters, all the people of family feel connected and involved. This is why those who are devoid of real sister or brother link up with friends and celebrate this festival.

The power of this festival has only strengthened over the passage of time. People who saw an explosion of new era began to believe that amid the losing family values, all festivals will merely become a formality. And that fear has somewhat realized too. If you see Diwali or Holi, people now do not have the same zeal that was there a few years ago. But then Rakhi is the one which actually has got strengthened only.

The reason could be the distances between people these days. People are placed at distance locations and hardly get an opportunity to see each other. The mobility of phones though has shrunk the world virtually but still the physical links are very important for any relationship to flourish. And Rakhi is the only festival in which people can connect emotionally with each other. When a father sees his daughter and brother together reunited with a thread, the ambience refills the emotional material inside the family veins which is great for any family.

As usual the festival was celebrated with lot of fervor across the region. This time around more people clicked pictures and posted on social media right away. One picture not only opened the chain for others, the idea also inspired to put it in public. Though posing for the social media was a formality, the emotions reflected on each of the pictures was real and that is the crux of the matter.

LIC organized a foot march

Udaipur : Life Insurance Corporation of Udaipur celebrated Insurance Week on completion of 59 weeks. An awareness march was organized on 25th of August. The foot march was flagged off by senior zonal manager BP Sharma. A large number of officials, insurers attended the march. Members were joined by their family members as well. During the march, insurers and agents showed slogans like Beti Bachao, Beti Padhao, Swachh Udaipur etc. The march started at PP Singhal Marg corner of Fatehsagar and ended at the overflow point of Fatehsagar paal. At the end of the march, members of the corporation performed in fancy dress and fun walk. This was followed by lightening of lamp to spread the message of clean Udaipur. The gathering was addressed by BS Sharma towards the end.

PM back down on land bill in Man ki Ba

New Delhi : Prime Minister Narendra Modi said on Sunday he was ditching the executive order aimed at making it easier for business to buy land, in a major setback for his reformist government. The PM, in his radio address to the nation, stopped short of directly naming the opposition but rued the 'misinformation' that spooked farmers.

NDA's land ordinance, which did away with a crucial consent clause that gave farmers the veto power on any land transfer, was opposed by farmers' collectives and opposition parties with protests also hitting work in Parliament.

"We are ready to amend land acquisition act to benefit farmers, who were subjected to misinformation leading to a lot of apprehension in their minds on the law. I have decided that the land ordinance be allowed to lapse. But 13 pointers that will benefit the farmers will be issued," Modi said in the 11th edition of his radio address Mann Ki Baat.

The government has had to issue the temporary executive orders three times since announcing the land bill in December after failing to push it through the chamber to make it permanent.
