It may turn self-goal for BJP

New Delhi : With the patience of common man thinning and Opposition' attack getting fiercer, and more personal, there is now a certain degree of unease within the BJP over political fall-out of the much-celebrated and appreciated demonetisation move. BJP chief Amit Shah may have been effectively able to counter allegations of political foes like Mayawati (BSP), Rahul Gandhi (Congress), the Samajwadi Party and Arvind Kejriwal (AAP) with questions on their "intent", but it seems there are worries over negative perceptions created due to continued travails and hardships of the common man.

Prime Minister Narendra Modi's anti-black money move is all set create a storm in Parliament by an "unimpressed" Opposition, which the BJP leadership is clearly not worried about. BJP leaders are in fact "looking forward to it" to expose the "corrupt" Opposition parties. What they seem to be worried about is eroding of a certain degree of support and goodwill the PM's move initially earned because of "growing doubts" about the government's "unpreparedness to handle the situation". All fingers are crossed for continued cooperation from the people, and that the move does not end up as a "self-goal" for the party.

The Prime Minister is keeping a "close watch on the ground situation", BJP leaders say, assuring that the situation will normalise soon. His three public appearances in the past two days are all aimed at connecting directly with the people, they add. Significantly, many BJP leaders, in private, agree that the decision could perhaps have been executed in a "more refined" manner to ensure lesser problems to the people.

Given the current chaos, including certain reports of "photocopies" of Rs 2,000 currency being passed on to unsuspecting people, they agree that instead of issuing a cumbersome high-denomination note, the demonetisation planners should perhaps have thought of introducing smaller denomination notes. "Perhaps the new currency could have been designed in a way that did not require reconfiguration of ATMs," they argue.

Children are our Future

"Children are the living messages we send to a time we will not see." This quote of John W. Whitehead, President of the Rutherford Institute beautifully highlights the important responsibility we have towards our children. Children are the priceless treasures; precious gifts from God. We are accountable to nurture them as holistic individuals with physical, emotional, psychological, and spiritual needs. If today our children are prepared well then they will become the leaders of tomorrow. But if our children are weak then the future of society will be weak.

In this context, how true are the words from the Proverbs that tell us, "Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old, he will not depart from it." Childhood is the most beautiful of all life's phases. The joy of childhood is always a great remembrance as it consists of happiness and living every moment joyfully with sheer innocence. Childhood has a great significance in the making of an adult. Therefore, the Children's Day is an important event not only for children but also for parents and teachers as this is the day to celebrate the spirit of childhood and to remind ourselves that our children need to be loved and cared for. This day is the birthday of Pandit Jawahar Lal Nehru, the first Prime Minister of Independent India who is popularly known as Chacha Nehru amongst children. He was a great leader who was keen about the welfare, education and development of children in India. Even though he was very senior in stature, he was fond of children and would spend valuable quality time with them. As a tribute to him, his birthday is celebrated as Children's Day in India. Children are fragile and if not loved and treated with respect and dignity, we will have broken adults in future. Therefore, as adults, parents and teachers have onerous responsibility upon their shoulders of making our children the living messages for the future we will not witness. = Children need to be looked after with kindness, encouraged and nurtured holistically. = Open up the doors to quality education in order to empower them to face the challenges of the 21st century. = Make available various opportunities to help them realize their full potential. = Teach them values to live by. = Provide them safe environment to live in and enjoy their childhood and grow up to be healthy citizens. = Above all give them time and listen to them. Franklin D. Roosevelt, 32nd President of the United States has aptly said, "We may not be able to prepare the future for our children, but we can at least prepare our children for the future." On your part, children you need to obey your parents and honour them and do what is right so that everything might go well and you may enjoy a long life on earth with peace, happiness and prosperity. Be grateful to God for your parents and teachers too. In the face of challenges, march forward with confidence to emerge victorious citizens of our country, India. Those of you who are fortunate to have innumerable opportunities at your disposal, should make the best of it and do not take things for granted. In this materialistic world, parents are urged to make their children sensitive towards the less privilege children and encourage them to grow up as socially responsible individuals. On this children's day, lets pledge to make our children's childhood safe and an enjoyable and memorable phase of their lives.

India has been graciously blessed with children who constitute almost 39% percent of the total population of 1.21 billion people. If they are cared for, valued, loved and nurtured well then India will be a living message of strength, vibrancy and great potential in the whole world. Wish you a Very Happy Children's Day!

IM(U)flagged off the second edition Solaris

In keeping with its aspirations of igniting, inspiring, and illuminating the young and brilliant minds of the country, Indian Institute of Management, Udaipur flagged off the second edition of its annual management fest, Solaris'16, on the 12th of November, from its new campus at Balicha, Udaipur. The event started off with an inaugural talk by the Director of the Institute, Prof. Janat Shah, who spoke about the challenges that the young, yet rising institute has had to face over the last five years, and how, despite these hurdles, it has managed to create an impact in the elite B-School scene, with its emphasis on the three pillars of academics, research, and entrepreneurship.

The event, which comprises of four summits spread over various domains of management, started off on Saturday with its flagship event, the Leadership Summit. With a view to widen the minds of the audience beyond just the business world, the theme of the event was- "Rise- Traverse, Transform, and Transcend". The summit aimed to bring together leaders from different backgrounds ranging from pharmaceuticals and insurance to entrepreneurship and social inclusion. To give their insights and share their experiences on how they managed to rise above and beyond the challenges they faced to come out successful.

India is World's fourth largest economy which is a great fact to take pride but with that, we also have a disturbing figure of more than 170 lacs of children working as a labourer. The World's maiden university was established in India but then the country has the highest number of illiterate children. And there are about 6 crores of people devoid of primary education. Udaipur though falls in the tribal belt and is an international city, it also has the most number of tribal people surviving and sustaining under extreme poverty.

The Right to Education is something that these kids really need but are much far from it. Official figures say that more than 79000 children between age bracket of 6-14 were found to be far from primary education. These are official figures, and of course, the reality might be bitter. To conserve rights of children, United Nations organized a child rights session on November 20, 1989. India agreed to this agreement and signed an agreement on December 10 of 1992. Indian constitution also has enough rights for children and their well beings. Their rights to education, medication, living are all reserved but still we see them selling toys at streets, cleaning windscreens of cars, and working as labor in factories and homes. We all pause for a moment from our daily routines as soon as we see a deprived child around, but then immediately after that, we get back to our cozy world. We believe that we cannot do anything for those kids. We feel bad for a moment, we request God to take care of them. We hope they get better life ahead. And at times, we do help them by giving them alms or buy their products without any reason. But that does not change the whole picture. The next moment, as we get back to our lives, so do they. We have a conviction that we cannot do much for them. This is not right. Instead, we can do much for them without spending a rupee. Alongside our government, organizations like UNICEF, Save The Children, and Gayatri Sewa Sansthan are working relentless in the direction to rehabilitate kids. As we support to rehabilitate a kid, it means many generations of that kid to follow get a life which is respectable and worthy. Any help to kids in distressed condition is a help to the God. What you can do to help a kid? Simply inform administration at 1098 if you see a child being exploited, beaten by anyone, or being forced to work despite the kid being underage. Kids are raw and if they are given proper care, they could nurture and help the country grow but if they are ill-treated, a sense of angst gets filled in their heart and such children easily take the path of criminality. So, if you help a child get a good life, you will find them in good shape while if you ignore and the child takes a wrong path, who knows, you might find him hurting you or your children in the future. Creating an atmosphere of love and empathy is the onus we all have to assume. Treat the kids of your maid with affection and teach your children to remain amicable with them. What you reap is what you sow. And each of us must take the pledge to support the kids around us and report any exploitation to the authorities.

Help To Kids In Distressed Condition Is A Help To The God !
