Prepare food for others once a week - Mukesh Madhwani

Udaipur: Social worker Mukesh Madhwani said that we cook food for seven days in the family, but we cannot imagine people living in any corner of the city waiting for food. In such a situation, it becomes our duty to cook for others one day a week so that not only will their stomach be complete, but also we will get peace of mind. He spoke at the weekly meeting organized by Being Manav at Ashoka Green. He said that food donations had been called Mahadan in our religious books. Donating or providing food to a hungry person is an act of great virtue. He said that we often provide food or any item in the form of food or donation to the person who comes to our house for alms, but with this new year, we started a new initiative that we should make 1 day a week daily at our home. Make extra food for one person, i.e., a little more than available. Madhwani said that now this food should be given to the person around you or the person who came to your home to take alms and feed him a full meal. If we all start this initiative, it will be an act of great virtue. Along with this, it will also help in preserving human values.
