

Need for Sustainable Development While Preserving the Environment - Prof. Sarangdevot

Udaipur: The intersection of ancient and modern in the new education policy is a marvelous confluence. With societal changes, students need to prepare themselves accordingly, and the new education system aims to achieve that. Research has been emphasized, with the central government allocating a substantial budget of 50 lakh crores. The youth today often idolize film stars and athletes, which, although not entirely wrong, should not overshadow the importance of educators, engineers, doctors, and scientists as the true drivers of development.

"If we aim to make the country a developed nation by 2047, we need to develop a work culture. Discipline is essential, and talk alone doesn't drive a nation forward," said Prof. Kailas Sodani, the Vice-Chancellor of the Nobel University of Sciences and Management at the inauguration session of the two-day international conference on "Sustainable Development in Information Technology and Management."

Prof. Sarangdevot, Chairman, stated that in the current era, while preserving the environment, there is a need for sustainable development. The continuous exploitation of natural resources for personal gains has resulted in adverse environmental effects, leading to natural disasters worldwide. He stressed the importance of development that doesn't harm nature and can be sustained for future generations.

Prof. Sunita Mishra, Vice-Chancellor of Sukhadia University, emphasized the importance of extending the benefits of facilities to underprivileged sections of society.

She mentioned that sustainable development cannot be envisioned without ensuring that every individual in the country benefits from all available amenities.

The Chairman of the Computer Science Department, Dr. Vivek Chaplot, mentioned that parallel sessions on management and computer science would feature various research papers in different technical sessions. The conference also included a commendable poster presentation, where high-quality research was lauded by eminent judges.

Mind Management Workshop Organized at Vidya Bhavan Polytechnic

Udaipur: Vinod Purohit, an expert in mind mapping, conducted a "Mind Management" workshop at Vidya Bhavan Polytechnic, emphasizing the profound impact of conscious thinking on one's personality and future.

Purohit began by highlighting the subconscious mind's ability to accept both positive and negative thoughts like fertile soil accepting any seed. He stressed that thinking constructively and creatively leads to optimal health, success, and prosperity.

According to Purohit, the subconscious mind never argues; it accepts suggestions as truth, manifesting situations, experiences, and events accordingly. He urged participants to be cautious of negative thoughts, emphasizing that they gradually influence thoughts and behavior, shaping individual personalities.

Negativity, whether from external sources or self-imposed, affects thoughts and personality. However, this happens only when individuals consent to such mental influences. Purohit encouraged participants to consciously provide only constructive, creative, and positive suggestions to their subconscious minds.

He explained the distinction between the subconscious mind, the seat of emotions and thoughts, and the conscious mind, a guardian protecting against false assumptions and negativity. The conscious mind responds to the nature of thoughts generated by the conscious mind.

In conclusion, Purohit emphasized the importance of ensuring that only positive and constructive suggestions are given to the subconscious mind. Thoughts that nurture, bless, elevate, and inspire should be cultivated, as otherwise, negative thoughts may bring pain, failure, suffering, illness, and adversity.

The workshop commenced with a welcome address by Dr. Anil Mehta, the principal of Vidya Bhavan Polytechnic. Dr. Sunil Jagasia, Jay Prakash Shirmali, Dr. Bhagwati Aheer, and Dr. Vikram Kumawat shared insights on creativity during the workshop.

Paras Health: Successful Treatment of Rare Brachial Plexus Schwannoma Tumor

Udaipur: Doctors at Paras Health, Udaipur, successfully treated a rare brachial plexus schwannoma tumor in a 45-year-old patient named Seema (changed name). The patient had been experiencing a gradually increasing lump in her neck and persistent pain in her right hand. After consulting multiple doctors without finding a suitable treatment, she sought the advice of Dr. Ajit Singh, Senior Neurosurgeon at Paras Health, Udaipur. Following an MRI, it was revealed that the tumor was located between the nerves in the hand, known as brachial plexus nerve cell tumor.

Paras Health, Udaipur, led by Dr. Ajit Singh, performed a complex surgery to remove the tumor, providing a new lease of life to the woman. Dr. Ajit Singh explained that nerve cell tumors are mostly found inside the brain, with only five percent occurring in the neck. Timely treatment is crucial, as these tumors can cause unbearable pain and even lead to a stroke in the hand. Despite potential risks during surgery, the experienced team at Paras Health, Udaipur, successfully removed the tumor with the help of neuro-monitoring and a microscope.

Seema, the patient, expressed her gratitude to Paras Health, Udaipur, and Dr. Ajit Singh, stating that she had lost hope after visiting multiple hospitals. However, Paras Health, Udaipur, performed a miraculous treatment, and she is now completely healthy.
